

Terrence L. Olsen formed his own immigration law practice, Olsen Law Firm, in Chattanooga, Tennessee in 2003. He received his Bachelor of Arts degree in English from the University of Tennessee at Chattanooga, a Master of Fine Arts in Creative Writing from Southern Illinois University, and his Juris Doctor from the William and Mary School of Law. His practice areas include both employment immigration law, and family immigration law. He has given immigration law lectures to international students and advisors at the University of Tennessee at Chattanooga, University of Tennessee at Knoxville, Southern Adventist University, Bryan College, and Dalton State College. He is an adjunct professor at Bryan College for its MBA program, and most recently taught an immigration paralegal course at Chattanooga State for the Fall of 2009. He is currently the Chair of the Tennessee Bar Association's Immigration Law Section.
